

CALM Clinical Workshop

The Counseling on Access to Lethal Means (CALM) Clinical Workshop is a 3.5-hour training that aims to help those in mental health, medical, and human service professions to counsel individuals and their families to temporarily reduce access to firearms and dangerous medications during times of heightened suicide risk.

Workshop participants will

Be able to provide a rationale for using means safety interventions

Articulate multiple options for increasing the safety of firearm storage

Outline steps for reducing access to dangerous doses of medication

Practice conducting means safety interventions with at-risk individuals and their families through case discussions and role plays

The use of means safety interventions is an important tool to keep individuals at risk safe during times of crisis. The CALM Clinical Workshop prepares clinicians to have collaborative and effective conversations about the safe storage of medications—the most common method of suicide attempt—and firearms—the most common method of suicide.
